

The Kidnaping of Henrietta True to Reel Life Thus Far

Detectives Listlessly Advise Louis Bulte, Father, to Advertise Ransom Will Be Paid as Asked in Note

For several years Henrietta Bulte, sixteen, of 116 East 116th Street, has devoted much of her spare time to motion pictures and has yearned for a celluloid career of fame.

In the movies the beloved daughter of a family leaves her home, as Henrietta did on the morning after Easter, to do a little shopping or something (Henrietta had $255 in Easter gifts to deposit in the Harlem Bank), and the Black Hand or the Mafia or some other variety of kidnaper gets her.

Following the proper film traditions, eventually the bereaved parents get a threatening note, something like the one that Henrietta's father, Louis Bulte, a cigar manufacturer, received Friday night. This read:

"Your daughter, Henrietta, is safe and held for a ransom. Advise in the next Monday's 'Globe' if you wish to ransom her."

The letter bore a New York post mark, and somehow didn't seem to excite the detectives who have been looking for Henrietta as much as it should. Thus far the detectives are the only ones that have refused to play up to movie standards.

"Advise in 'The Globe,'" they told Mr. Bulte yesterday; "maybe she'll come home."

To-morrow's editions of that paper will carry the following appeal to the "kidnapers":

"Ransom will be paid. How much and where?"

Henrietta looks older than her sixteen years and is a student at Public School 159. For some time she has been very eager to go into the movies. Detectives have questioned officials of most of the picture studios in the city, thus far, however, with no success.
